

The cumulation of semantically related verbs in literary and artistic texts

Abstract:

Cumulation with verbal near-synonymous lexemes figures significantly in literary artistic texts. This is primarily due to the fact that verbal, as well as adjectival, lexemes are linguistic units with attributive characteristics, and thus offer different choices. Cumulation with reduplication of semantically related verbs is realised within the framework of sentence construction, i.e. conjunctive or non-conjunctive compound sentences. As a dominant of cumulative series, there are verbs of different semantic types, including verbs that denote speaking, verbs of displacement, of moving within space, and so on. The aim of the analysis is to describe the syntactical and stylistic specificities of this type of figurative accumulation and to single out their distinctive models within literary artistic texts.
